

TWO SLIM HOPES OF BREXIT

Theresa May's Florence speech confirmed suspicions that this government is conspiring with a foreign power against the expressed will of the British people.

May's failures to control immigration; her peculiar coronation; her delay in triggering Article 50 and repealing the 1972 European Communities Act; her providing time for legal challenges and the Remain establishment to plot subversion; her failure to strengthen borders in preparation for Brexit; or to spur the civil service into action for readiness; her handling of the few Brexit-supporters in cabinet; her choice of top cabinet ministers; her parliamentary candidate selection to ensure that the number of Remain MPs grew in 2017; her promise of a free vote on fox-hunting in the 2017 manifesto as part of a raft of policies seemingly designed to lose votes among core Tory support; her offer to the EU of billions for nothing and two more years of delay, along with deeper integration into Mr Juncker's EU army and police; all point to one predictable outcome: the long-suffering British voter will not get his country back while May is Prime Minister.

If Tories recognise the folly of their suicidal course and replace May with a committed Brexiter, they have a chance of upsetting Corbyn's glib ascendancy.

Our only other hope of Brexit is Momentum, who see the EU as a competitor to their own brand of socialist tyranny.

TRANSITION TO CORBYN

AGENDA REASSIGNMENT: MAY WANTS ORDERLY TRANSITION TO A CORBYN GOVERNMENT

Cameron spent £9.3 million of our money on a leaflet which told us "the government will implement what you decide". Yet Theresa May still hasn't persuaded Heywood and his civil 'service' to begin taking back control of our borders and implementing what 70% of Tories voted for: true Brexit.

Why hasn't she? Surely she realises that failing to implement real Brexit will destroy all trust in the Tories and bar them from government for generations. It may even spell the end of her divided party. There is only one explanation: she wants to transition to a Jeremy Corbyn politbureau and create a disaster out of Brexit. The Tory party can only be saved by a new leader – one determined to make a success of leaving the EU.

UK NUCLEAR DETERRENT TO FALL UNDER EU CONTROL

Theresa May's Florence flirtation made one thing clear: 'security', an EUphemism for defence, is going to be an area of increasing integration, despite Brexit.

The Lancaster House Franco-British Treaty, the reduction of the UK's exceptional military to the level of other EU nations, and the establishment of unified EU military command and procurement all point to one future: Brussels having control of Britain's forces. German Chancellors will decide where Her Majesty's troops, ships and submarines are sent. This is ReMay's treasonous plan for BrexINO (Brexit In Name Only). The history of stealth and autocracy shows that the Tory party will only notice your dissent if you cancel your membership and vote for another party.
